SHORT DESCRIPTION

Villagers in central China take on a chemical company that is poisoning their air, water and land. For five years they fight to transform their environment and as they do, they find themselves transformed as well.

LONG SYNOPSIS

Zhang Gongli is a farmer who grew up in the village of Qiugang, in Anhui Province; his house and fields lie near the banks of the Huai River. In 2004, private chemical companies took over an old state-owned enterprise that had long produced pesticides and dyes in Qiugang. As production ramped up, black waters disgorged from the plants and flooded the fields of Qiugang. Fish died, crops failed, and villagers grew alarmed by the large numbers of their own succumbing to cancer.

When his own fields could no longer be farmed, Zhang filed a lawsuit against the factory that adjoins his land. He lost. This marked the beginning of a stubborn and often dangerous campaign that spanned five years. Our film follows Zhang and his allies in the village as they draw up a petition to bring to Beijing, recruit support from the local media, reach out for help from a local NGO, and in time, make contact with environmental activists from across China. From clandestine trips to the nation's capital to private negotiating sessions with factory representatives, our footage reveals a rare portrait of grassroots activism in contemporary China. Far from a simple black-and-white portrait, the film tracks the villagers as they seek out the help and power of the national government to curb local businesses and local officials. The film's intimacy leads us past the headlines and clichés about modern China to offer a memorable portrait of villagers wrestling with, and transformed by, China's headlong rush into modernity.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Zhang Gongli
Villager

Zhang Gongli, a farmer with only a middle-school education, is the central character in our film. He makes for an improbable eco-warrior. Now almost 60, he has spent most of his life working in the fields. He is fiercely nationalistic, with an abiding faith in China's Communist Party. Yet when factories started poisoning his village, he pushed back. He taught himself the rudiments of Chinese law and filed a lawsuit against the polluters. When he lost in the courts, he persevered. Over the course of almost five years, our cameras watch as this modest and at times hesitant farmer turns himself into a savvy leader. As a representative of the factories acknowledges towards the end of the film, Zhang is no longer "an ordinary villager".

Wang Yongcui
Villager

She may be a gossip and something of a busybody, but Wang Yongcui was the only person brave enough to talk in front of the camera when our crew first arrived in Qiugang. The mother of three sons, Wang is also aunt to the village head, and she has a story or two to tell about him (as well as all her other neighbors). Over the course of the campaign, Wang makes herself into Zhang's improbable ally and essential partner.

Wang Zongying
Villager

87-year-old Wang Zongying makes a mark on her wall for every death in the village. She says over 50 villagers have died in the past two and a half years alone. And about a third of those who died were under 50 years old. She says in all her long years, she has never seen such a high mortality rate. "I'm 87 years old," she tells our cameras. "and I never tell lies."

Yang Jun
Village Committee Member

Yang Jun knows that the chemical factories stopped discharging their wastewater whenever there was an inspection by the local environmental protection agency and it infuriated him. Each time he heard that a new inspection was about to take place, he would race to the Baojia Waterway to collect samples of the pollution and to crosscheck the official reporting.

Ren Jingwen
Green Anhui Volunteer

Green Anhui is a young and relatively small NGO based in Anhui Province. Its mission is to increase public interest and involvement in environmental protection. It was founded in 2003 by a group of journalists, environmental activists, and students. Investigating conditions along the Huai River, one of the NGO's volunteers discovered unnatural colors flowing from a tributary. He traced the source of the pollution to Qiugang. Volunteer Ren Jingwen subsequently spent a lot of time in Qiugang helping residents understand their legal rights and gathering concrete evidence of what was happening to the village's water.

FILMMAKERS

THOMAS LENNON
WRITER, PRODUCER

Lennon's work in documentary film has won the field's most coveted honors: an Academy Award (two nominations), two duPont-Columbia awards, two George Foster Peabody and Writers' Guild awards, and two national Emmys. He has twice premiered films at Sundance.

He founded, with Ruby Yang, the Chang Ai Media Project; their groundbreaking AIDS messages have been seen over 900 million times on Chinese television and the Internet, probably the largest campaigns in the history of the disease. This work earned them profiles in the Washington Post, the San Francisco Chronicle, the Los Angeles Times and on PBS. Their film The Blood of Yingzhou District won an Oscar in 2007. They recently completed the last in a trilogy of short films about modern China, The Warriors of Qiugang, which he wrote and produced. He recently directed a series of short films for the Internet commissioned by the Peterson Foundation.

FILMMAKERS

RUBY YANG DIRECTOR, PRODUCER

Ruby Yang is a noted Chinese-American filmmaker whose work in documentary and dramatic film has earned her numerous international awards, including an Oscar . She lives and works in Beijing.

In 2003, along with producer Thomas Lennon, Yang founded the Chang Ai Media Project to raise awareness about HIV/AIDS in China. Since then, its documentaries and public service announcements have been seen more than 900 million times. The Blood of Yingzhou District, which Yang directed as part of the project, won the 2006 Academy Award for Documentary Short. The project's second documentary short, Tongzhi in Love, was released in June 2008. In August 2010, Yang and Lennon completed the project's third documentary short, The Warriors of Qiugang.

Prior to her work in Beijing, Yang's feature documentaries Citizen Hong Kong and China 21 aired in Hong Kong, Taiwan and numerous European outlets after showing on PBS. In 2009, Yang completed A Moment in Time, a one-hour documentary for the Center for Asian American Media. It was aired on PBS and screened at numerous film festivals in Asia.

She is currently developing several feature film projects with young Chinese scriptwriters.

GUAN XIN FIELD PRODUCER – CINEMATOGRAPHER

Guan Xin was born in 1970 in Liaoning, China. As an independent producer, he has explored the far reaches of Western China, the Taklamakan Desert, the Wujiang River, Ali, Hoh Xil, and other areas in northern Tibet, making films focused on cultural themes, wildlife, and narrative subjects. Guan has served as a photographer, producer, and director and actively participates in cultural exchanges between the East and West. His works include Finding Shambhala, Przewalski's Gazelle and Approaching Hoh Xil.

BRIAN KEANE COMPOSER

Brian Keane is a leading music producer and composer who has won numerous Emmys and Grammys. He wrote the music for Lennon and Yang's Academy Award winning film The Blood of Yingzhou District.

CO-PRODUCTION PARTNER

Yale Environment 360 is an online magazine covering environmental issues from a global perspective, with original articles and multimedia content from some of the world's foremost journalists, scientists, environmentalists, and policymakers. Since its launch in 2008, Yale Environment 360 has attracted an international audience and has received various honors, including a National Magazine Award for Digital Media, the Online Journalism Award for Best Specialty Site, and a National Press Photographers Association award for Best Documentary. Yale Environment 360 is published at the Yale School of Forestry & Environmental Studies.
